Synopsis

Apprentice horologist Elian Voss lives in a harbor where the tides arrive by bell schedule. When the sea stops retreating, she discovers that the ancient clock beneath the lighthouse has lost one of its silver teeth. The missing piece was carried beyond the mapped ocean by the disgraced Captain Brann.

Elian joins Brann's small crew aboard a sail-powered workshop. Their voyage crosses forests of floating kelp, islands that surface for only an hour, and a storm that repeats the same minute. At the edge of the world they meet the Keeper, who reveals that the tide machine is failing because generations have forced it to hold the sea in an unnatural rhythm. Repairing it will save the harbor but flood the kingdom's abandoned coastal walls.

Themes and Style

The adventure combines maritime fantasy with intricate mechanical imagery. Its central questions concern inherited responsibility, adaptation, and the danger of treating nature as a machine that can be permanently controlled. Humor comes from the crew's improvised inventions, while the emotional story follows Elian learning to challenge the rules she was trained to preserve.

Production Notes

Miniature ships and large water tanks were combined with painted skies. The tide clock contains hundreds of visible moving wooden parts. The fictional production is rated PG for fantasy peril and brief frightening images.
